Hi Shalom,

Do you have any thoughts on silt resulting from clay soils in lakes. I am trying to determine whether there's any likelihood of serious damage to Lake MicMac from the runoff from the development site. People with no real biological or scientific knowledge seem to be jumping to conclusions about what the impact will be of the silt. Obviously as a fine silt it takes a while to settle out and is thus more noticeable than heavier particles. I also know that really the damage is to be seen in the future if there is any. But do you have any thoughts to enlighten me?

Thanks
Andrew
